Hazardous Weather

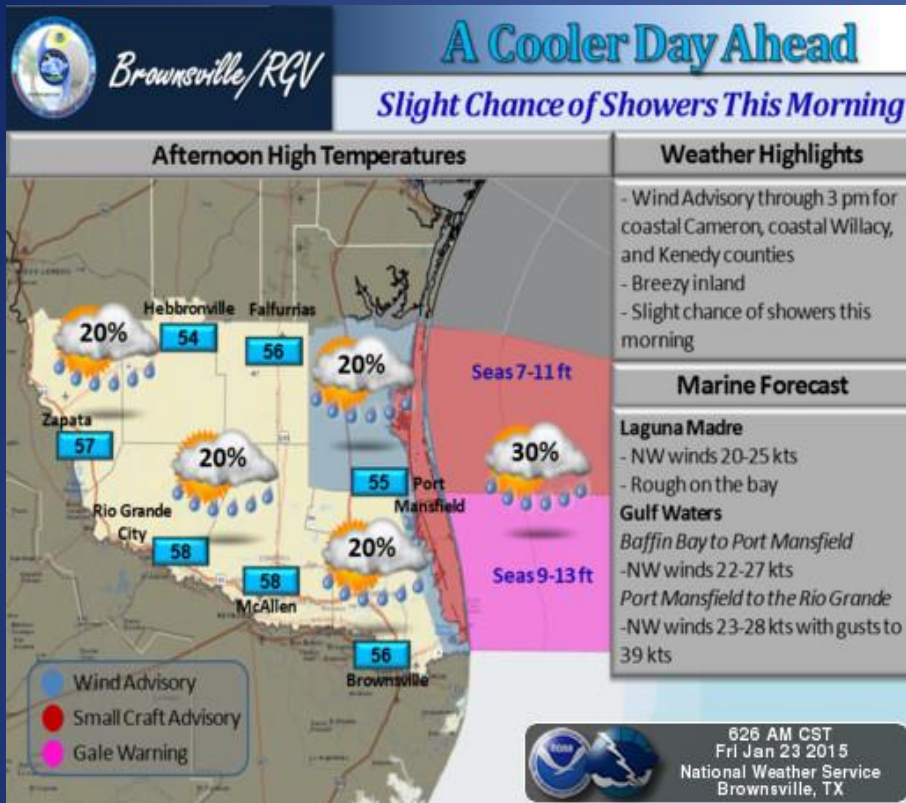

A winter storm is exiting the area with mostly light to moderate snow possible through mid morning. One inch or less of additional accumulations possible.

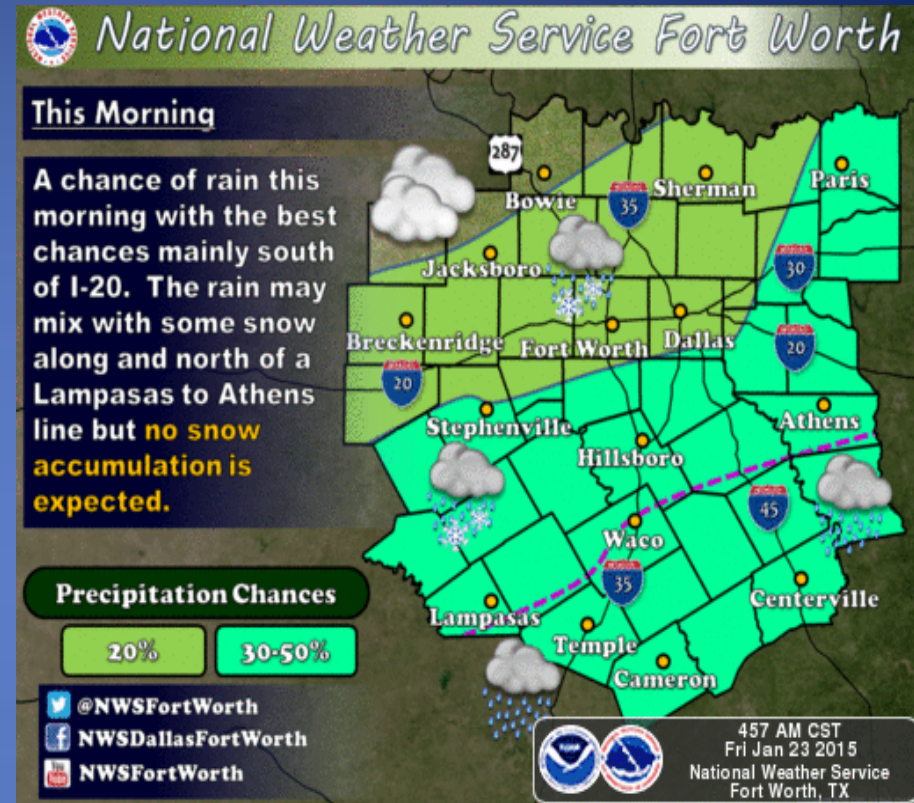

Expect light to moderate rain this morning. Snow may mix in with the rain over the Edwards Plateau and northwestern Hill Country. We do not expect any impacts from snow as temperatures will be at or above freezing. By 9 AM temperatures will range from the upper 30s to the middle 40s.

Hazardous Weather

In the wake of yesterday's cold front a cooler day can be expected today. Temperatures will only push into the mid to upper 50s. There is a slight chance of showers this morning, but rain chances diminish this afternoon. Mostly cloudy skies this morning will become partly cloudy by this afternoon. A Wind Advisory is in effect for coastal Cameron, coastal Willacy, and Kenedy counties until 3 pm. NW winds of 30 to 35 mph are expected with gusts up to 40 mph. Breezy conditions are expected inland, with NW winds averaging 20 to 25 mph. Move inside or fasten down any light weight or easily moved objects, such as trash cans, patio furniture, and basketball goals. Driving on east to west roadways will be difficult in high profile vehicles.

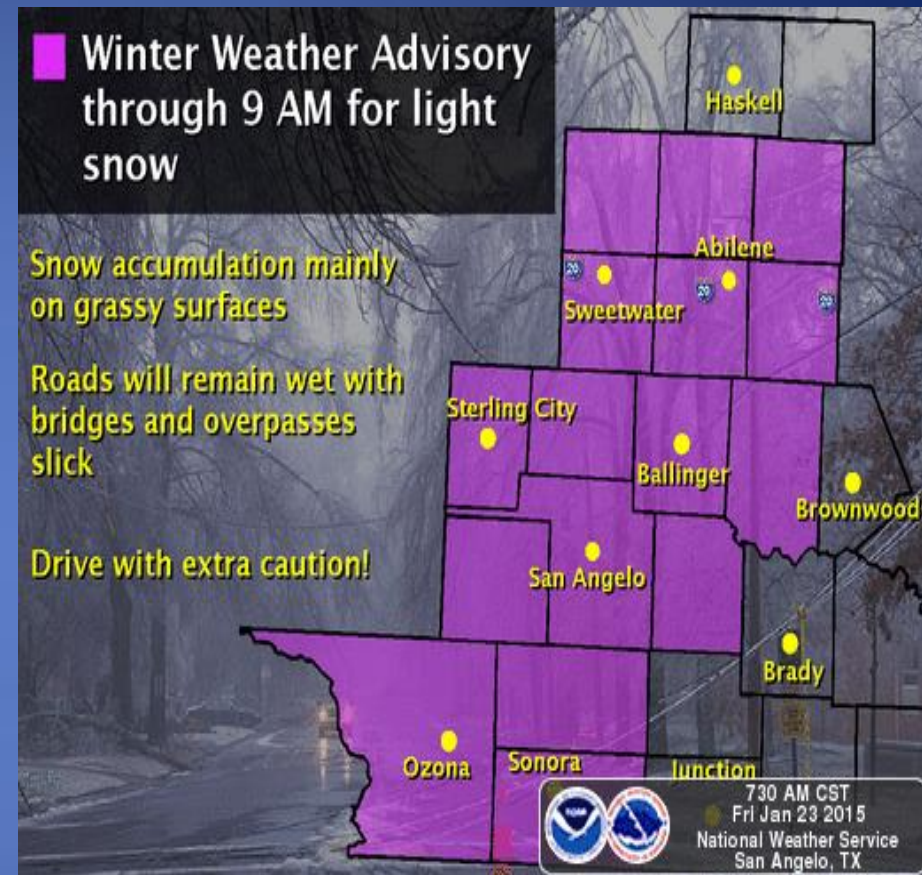

There will be chance of rain across most of North and Central Texas this morning with the best chances being mainly south of Interstate 20. A few snow flakes may mix in with the rain along and north of a Lampasas to Athens line, but surface temperatures will be too warm for any snow accumulations.

Hazardous Weather

Clearing skies and milder west winds will help melt much of the recent snow except in those areas well north and northwest of Lubbock. Highs will range from near 50 in the Rolling Plains to just the lower 30s in the southwest Panhandle where snow depths are thickest.

A Winter Weather Advisory is in effect through 9 AM for the counties highlighted in purple.
